Brainstorming the structure of a grammar module

PROMPT

I teach English at university and I create online courses on Genially and Moodle.

Common rules. Feedback: for each question, write feedback for a correct answer (a short confirmation, then further explanation where relevant) and feedback for an incorrect answer (formative, explanatory, CONCISE, clear and non-threatening), consistent with the course. Genially formats: all native exercise types as appropriate (drag and drop, multiple-answer MCQ, single-answer MCQ, ranking…), but only one gap per gap-fill.

My courses are organised in stages (0 to 6 on Genially, 7 on Moodle):

0) An overall scenario for the whole course, related to the concerns of young adults, fun but realistic.

1) INTRODUCTION: an exercise in which students observe a corpus showing all the types of usage I will then explain, and organise them into sections after a conceptualisation question.

2) HUB: a menu with the different sections I will then develop, either in a linear order or with students choosing freely. For this course: [LINEAR ORDER / FREE ORDER].

3) SECTION 1:

a) An introductory observation exercise with all the terms that will be covered, followed by conceptualisation using, for example, a drag-and-drop table with columns, or a quiz, whichever is most appropriate. Each section is introduced by an episode of the scenario. If the order is linear, the story moves forward from one section to the next; if the order is free, each episode must make sense on its own.

b) Explanation of the rules, making sure students are active: at the very least with click-and-reveal, but if there are ways of making them truly active, those should be preferred.

c) An exercise checking understanding of the rule, called “Vous suivez” (“Are you following?”). There may be one or two exercises depending on relevance and length. Feedback and formats: see the common rules.

4) SECTION 2 onwards:

Same structure as section 1.

5) Final concluding page: a concluding corpus with a slightly fun ending, and a recap exercise to check that the whole course has been understood. The scenario is complete, but may continue in stage 6 (practice exercises).

Translated from the French original with Claude · Espace Langues · Université Sorbonne Paris Nord · CC BY-NC-SA 4.0

6) Between 5 and 10 interactive exercises using Genially formats, on Genially, to test mastery of the notions explained. This is a spin-off of the scenario, but do not repeat exactly the same words or the same quizzes as in the previous “Vous suivez” exercises. Feedback and formats: see the common rules.

7) Graded assessment on Moodle: a new scenario with a wide range of everyday situations. Any question type from the native Quiz plugin can be used: choose the most relevant one for each notion. Feedback: see the common rules; here, further explanation is always included and can go further (B2).

Course level: B1+ (students who have already studied these points without mastering them, are in fact B1, often struggling, and are aiming for B2).

You must focus on the mistakes French speakers often make in English.

Language:

- The overall scenario (the story as presented at the start of the course) is in English, with a translation provided.
- The scenario episodes introducing each section are in English, as are the corpora students work on to deduce the rules.
- The mini-scenarios of the exercises and the instructions are in English.
- The explanations of the rules and the feedback are in French.
- All examples are in English and, if they are difficult for a French speaker to understand, a translation is given.

Example: the course [EXAMPLE COURSE], attached in the sources, shows this structure.

I have a first content proposal on [GRAMMAR POINT] in the attached documents (Word and PDF): you can reorganise it, improve it and turn it into a scenario.

First, propose the organisation of the course: the overall scenario, then, for each section, the scenario episode, the uses covered and the Genially exercise type chosen. Wait for my approval. I will write the exercises myself; you can then help me write the feedback.

Translated from the French original with Claude · Espace Langues · Université Sorbonne Paris Nord · CC BY-NC-SA 4.0